Because at the end of the day, that's a viable life, and it's something so treasured and valued. So, thank you. And I join Maria in thanking you. I've learned a lot as well, Michelle. Let's conclude our program today by asking first, Michelle, if there's one thing that you hope that the listeners to this program take away. Doesn't have to be one, it could be more than one. But the one that's foremost in your mind, and if there's another one behind it, go ahead.

Michelle Buenrostro

Yeah, so our message for the world is that anybody can and everybody should oppose abortion. We don't care about your backgrounds or anything else. If you are a human, you should care about human rights.

Okay. And Maria, what would you want the viewers to take away from what you've experienced and what you are doing? Um, yes, that every life is valued and treasured. That it really comes down to pro-life and pro-murder of a life. And so I want people to know that there's a lot of support out there to help women through their pregnancies, regardless of what they went through.

Robert N. Rust

Well listen, I wanna thank both of you young ladies. You've presented very powerful arguments that are not emotionally based per se, but on the other side of it, both of you had to go through the emotional trauma in your own personal situations, and have emerged on the pro-life side. This has been very informative, and I thank you.

And I hope the viewers of this podcast take away what you've given to them and put it to good work. And with that, I'll conclude our program for today. Thank you. Thank you. Thank you.
